ANECDOTES ABOUT TOOLE

Amusing Incident When the Comedian Was Playing For a Benefit.

A curious incident occurred during one of the visits to Birmingham, England, of the late John Lawrence Toole, the English comedian. On that occasion there were some fifty seats arranged "behind the scenes" for eager spectators. Toole, coming from his dressing room to the stage, had to pass some of these seats. The foremost occupants were a would be aristocratic old lady and her daughters. When Toole passed them, as Tom Cranky, the bricklayer, in "The Birthplace of Rodgers," the old lady's blue blood boiled at the indignity of such men being near her, and she murmured audibly that she wondered the workmen were not kept away. The young ladies were quicker, and discovered their companion's error and told her of it. However, in the next piece a somewhat similar mistake arose in the old lady's mind, and finally in the last piece, which happened to be "Oliver Twist," when Toole drew near her party, again on his way to the stage as the Artful Dodger, her anger knew no bounds, and she declared, looking around her haughtily, that she had never before been in such low company, and that the workhouse must have been let loose into the theater! Her daughters had some trouble in convincing her of her third mistake, and doubtless to this day she maintains to her own private friends that the manager of the Birmingham theater was very careless as to whom he admitted within his establishment.

Toole told an amusing story as to his makeup. The incident occurred when he was playing for a benefit at Sadler's Wells, in London. He performed at the Surrey theater and at the Adelphi, in London, on the same evening and had little time to lose in dressing. However, his performance being over at the Surrey and the Adelphi he left the latter house, taking a cab in order to be driven to Sadler's Wells. He entered the cab as Mr. Spriggins, an old man, the character in "Ici on Parle Français," which he had just been playing, and, to the cabman's intense surprise, when he opened the door of his vehicle for his fare to dismount at the stage entrance of Sadler's Wells, the popular attire of Muster Grinidge in "The Green Bushes," met his eye. There was of course no vestige of old Mr. Spriggins in the cab. "What have you done with the old man?" cried the startled cabman, frightened at his sudden disappearance. "Where's the old man?" Hereupon Toole explained to him that he and the old man were one and the same person, held out a liberal fare and told him that they were waiting for him on the stage inside the theater. But the cabman was obstinate and refused to let his fare go, calling on him continually to produce the old man. The disturbance might have been prolonged had not some of the theatrical officials come outside to look for the recreant actor and found him struggling between the cabman and the appreciative crowd. A release was effected and Toole taken in triumph to the stage.

Toole was not only a comic actor. He had serious pathetic powers, and his rendering of Caleb Plimmer in "The Cricket on the Hearth" impressed all who saw it.

DR. Oliver Wendell Holmes was once asked: "How early should we begin to train children?" "At least one hundred years before they are born," replied the genial philosopher. He was right. The mistakes of our ancestors are bearing fruit in our own lives. We suffer through the misunderstanding or neglect of our parents, and in the same measure will our children suffer if we train them contrary to "the way they should go."

In no department of "child culture" have more mistakes been made than in the matter of dress, and more especially has this been the case during the critical period of infancy and early childhood.

The Taped-Button Waist for children takes the place of several layers of body covering, and at the same time gives a means of attachment and support to all necessary garments, such as petticoats, skirts, drawers and trousers. Visit the Ladies' Underwear Department and see this waist; the clerk will cheerfully explain it to you. They sell regularly at 25c, but to introduce them we make the 12½c price, each.
